The Daily Standard. Monday, August 29, 1870.

The War Mews. Dates from the seat of war comdown to the 27th, Saturday. As usual the telegrams are very conflicting; and it is difficult to distinguish between baseless remor and fact. Enough facts have, however, been transmitted over the wires to enable one who carefully studies the dispatches to determine tolerably clearly the relationship of the two opposing armies. Prussian military authorities have been for some time of the opinion that Paris was the weak point of France. Its capture was consequently the object of the present campaign. The great battle of the 18th August, compelled them to halt on their march towards the French Capital, for fear of Bazsine cutting their line and falling on their rear. Within the last day or two however they commenced again to advance slowly toward Paris; but evidently fearing another check. With the exception of a few positions, such as Strasbourg, Toul, and Pfalzbourg, all the North East of France seems to be in the hands of the Prussians. The whole of Alsace and Lorraine seems to have been over-ran by them. Their head-quarters are at Bar le Duc on the Marne, equidistant from Metz and Chalons. large Prussian force seems to be occu-pied in catting off Bazaine's communica-tions with McMahon, by occupying positions at Varennes on the Aisne, and Dun on the Meuse; another armythreatens R. F. PICKETT & CO., Chalous and Reims where the Emperor and McMahon are presumed to be; whilst a third force seems detailed to advance against Trochu at Paris. Their low and cautious movement in attempt ing to execute the plan of the campaign betrays doubts of their own success, and that is quite natural. For it is evident Baxaine holds a strong position at Metz, besides the line of railroad connecting that place with Mentmedy and Messieres.

Being near the frontier of Laxembourg and Belgium, there is no opportunity for the Prussians to get in behind his line. By extending to Montmedy he compels the Prussians to make their attack in front. If such an attack were made, whilst McMahon acted in concert, falling on the Prussian rear, the success of the French would be almost certain. McMahon presumedly is well posted at Reims and Chalons, either for offensive or defensive purposes; for his central position in the line between Metz and Paris enables him to operate against the enemy's centre so as to cut off their communications, if they advance on Paris, and also fall on their rear whilst Trochu may deal blows in front. The advance of the Crown Prince on Paris by two lines, one following the Marne and the other the Aube, although part of the Prussian plan of campaign, may well be doubted as to whether they are serious in the attempt at present. It is more than likely designed to cause a change in the position of the French forces, and bring on a pitched battle in the neighborheod of Chalons. If the Prussians have enough soldiers to hold Bazaine and McMahon in check, besides a force strong enough to advance on Paris, the capture of the French capital may be capture of the French capital may be seriously attempted; but not otherwise. On reviewing, by the light of the telegrams, the positions and forces of France and Prussia, the former seems to have the advantage of the latter. The French seem determined to preserve their communications, act on the defensive or take the offensive only with the chances in their favor and prolong the war, and exhaust the Prussians. On the other hand King William must advance, must take the offenthat it has become a difficult matter to carry out his plan of the campaign; and it is questionable if he will not be the first to make proposals for peace. But it does not appear that any terms that he could offer would be acceptable now, or so long as the Prussians remain on French soil. If the French were to gain a great victory, even, it is doubtful whether they would now assent to peace. The tenden—

It is evident, however, would now assent to peace. The tendency of events seems to be in the direction of a war of exhaustion, and it is not likewould now assent to peace. The tendency of events seems to be in the direction of a war of exhaustion, and it is not likely that the French are so exhausted as to render it necessary to accept peace, with the invaders in their country. The telegram that Bourges, a city of 20,000 inhabitants, in the Department of Cher, almost in the geographical centre of France, and one hundred and twenty-four miles south of Paris, is being prepared to receive the Government and pared to receive the Government and Corps Legislatif, indicates an intention on the part of the Emperor and the French to fight to the last extremity, rather than make peace with loss of prestige to France. The loss of a great battle might bring the French to terms; but such an occurrence is not so probable now, as it was a little time ago. Judging, therefore, from the surface of events, the war is likely to be prolonged.

> DARING ROBBERY .- On Saturday night, bost twelve o'clock, one of the most daring obberies was perpetrated, on the premises of Madame Maitre, corner of Johnson and Brood streets, which has ever taken place in Broad streets, white mas ever taken place in this city. It appears that about twelve e'clock Mrs. Maitre retired to bed, having locked all the doors in the house. A short time after she had gone to bed the inner door was opened by means of the ketch of the lock being taken off. The robber entered the bedsom and quiet'y took the key of the closet room and quietly took the key of the closet where the money was, and opened it, and took a small satchel containing $250 in siltor and several valuable papers. After he got his spoil he locked the closet, put the key satch where he found it, and unlocked the back where he found it, and unlocked the back door and went his way. Madame Maitre was awake all the time, watching the thief, who was unable to cry out, being afraid that if she made a noise he would kill her. It is supposed that the thief, who ever he is, made supposed that the thief, who ever he is, made entrance by the back door, early in the eresing, before it was locked, and secrete thingelf until the Madame had shut up the store and gone to bed. Yesterday morning the satchel, containing all the papers, was found by some children of Mrs. Cameron's, found by some children of Mrs. Cameron's, in her yard on Cormorant street; also the bag which contained the money was found and retarsed empty. As soon as the children found out who it belonged to, they returned it to the lawful owner. This is the second time that Mrs. Maitre has been robbed. The first time, four or five years ago, having lost $2,500, and never found out who the thief was. This time the guilty party is likely to be found out, as he is well known to Mrs. Maitre.

Mr. Cooke, the jester, will embark in his frail bark (the tut), propelled by four geese. No doubt but their will be a large number of people, who will go up to the gorge to witness the ancient and modern navigator. This is the first time such a regatta has taken place in the Colony, and it will be interestmation of neutrality by Her Britannic Majesty, in consequence of the present Franco-Prussias war. There are also circulars accompanying it from Earl Kimberley, Lord Granville, and others, relating to matters connected with the hostilities which have breken out between the two nations. The niners who were camped at Goldstream on Charles was engaged. Saturday, that they had crossed from the head of Leech river to a branch of the San Juan river on a proposition from The Prussian troops closely surrounded Strasburg yesterday. The Government prise arrived from the Mainland on Saturday Mernoon, at 3 o'clock, with about twenty passengers, a Cariboo mail and express, and $46,000 in treasure for the Banks. Among

The Assizes commenced, at New Westminster, on Monday, when the interesting and important case of J. L. Franklin came up for trial. The prisoner was arraigned upon an indictment charging him with inciting to commit a felony. Mr. McCreight prosecuted, on account of the illness of the Attorney General, and Mr. Robertson defended Franklin. Several witnesses were examined in the case, but nothing further elicited, only what has already appeared at the preliminary examination before the Stipendiary Magistrate at New Westminster. After the jury hearing all the evidence they retired to consider their verdict, and, after an absence of foar haurs, returned with a verdict of "notguilty." The has already appeared at the preliminary examination before the Stipendiary Magistrate at New Westminster.
